

Prior to the enactment of the Indiana Telephone Privacy law, my business and personal time was disturbingly interrupted. I have a home/office and received many "sales calls" during important business time or at a time I was having dinner.

Now, since the implimentation of the Telephone Privacy law, I am I frequently aware that I am free of daily telephone interruptions.

I recomment that no changes be made to lessen the Indiana Telephone Privacy law in reference to proceeding 02-278.

Sincerely, Edward E. Weiss
